

Dominic Holland

Dominic Holland is one of the UK's most acclaimed corporate event and awards hosts, renowned for his razor-sharp observational comedy and impeccable professionalism.

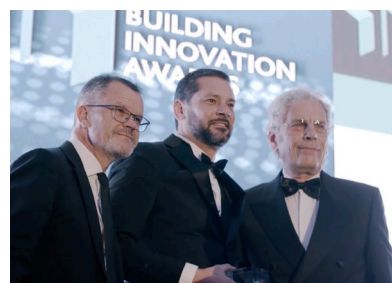

A multi-award-winning comedian with an extensive list of television and radio credits - including BBC Radio 4 series and appearances on Have I Got News For You and The Royal Variety Show - Dominic has firmly established himself as a trusted favourite for major corporate occasions.

Described by The Sunday Times as the “UK master of observational comedy,” Dominic brings charm, wit, and a deep understanding of client needs to every event. He works closely with organisers, taking calls, meetings, and briefings in advance to ensure that all material is relevant, concise, and perfectly tailored. He arrives well-prepared, completes all rehearsals, and always respects the boundaries and timings set by the client.

Dominic can seamlessly combine his stand-up comedy with hosting duties, offering a unique blend of entertainment and smooth event management- ideal for conferences, awards ceremonies, and special evenings that need both structure and laughter.

An accomplished author, Dominic has written nine books to date. His recent novel Open Links was Highly Commended at the 2025 Sports Book Awards, with all proceeds supporting the Anthony Nolan charity . He has also written Takes on Life, a weekly blog he has maintained for more than twenty years.

Dominic lives with his wife Nikki, has four sons, and a Staffordshire Bull Terrier. And despite his long and successful career, he freely acknowledges that he is, for many, best known as Tom Holland's dad - or to put it more concisely... Spider-Man's father.
