

Steve Jones

Steve's media career began when he was approached by Elle Magazine and asked to do some freelance modelling work. Steve went on to work in Australia, Korea and London for various clients such as Versace, Armani, Ralph Lauren, Adidas, and Coca Cola among others. It was a natural progression to the screen as Steve's original sense of humour and ability to get the very best out of people made him perfect presenter material.

Steve became an instantly recognisable and sought after broadcaster as one of the main presenters of the very popular 'T4' for Channel 4, where he kept the youth of the nation amused on Saturday and Sunday mornings for 7 years, whilst interviewing the great and good from the entertainment world.

Steve's popularity and charm was recognised by other broadcasters, and he was soon approached for work on a range of different channels. Among many shows Steve has hosted the BAFTA coverage for E! Entertainment, 101 Ways to Leave a Gameshow and Let's Dance for BBC 1.

In 2011 Steve landed the incredibly exciting opportunity to host the US version of X Factor, giving him a great introduction to US television. He went on to guest co-host Entertainment Tonight alongside Nancy O'Dell.

Now back in the UK, Steve had a great 2013 – hosting the final series of Let's Dance for Comic Relief for BBC1, V Festival coverage for Channel 4 and presenting on BBC Radio 2.

In 2014 Steve hosted the BBC Three six-part series "Hair", a gripping competition that showcased young British amateur skills in hair styling and he went on to co-present the long running Waitrose Weekend Kitchen, a Saturday Morning Breakfast show for Channel 4 alongside Lisa Snowdon.

In 2015 he hosted the live E4 dating show "Young, Free & Single LIVE" and 2016 saw him become the host of Channel 4's Formula One coverage alongside David Coulthard.
